The multi-piece OROCHI XXX model is a legitimate evolution of the OROCHI X4.

Bass rods have previously been made with the support of the development of carbon graphite. Long loved by bass anglers around the world, the OROCHI X4 has become a high-balance shaft thanks to the 4-axis manufacturing method that has advanced carbon graphite construction. But this is where the story really takes off. The Megabass Rod Factory had launched Project XXX (Kaisa). The mission of the project was to "explore unknown rod materials". To increase the overpowering strength and reduce the weight of the rod from the back belly (rear end of the body) to the tail piece (base) where the shaft is most stressed, ASL (shape memory metal fibre) and microfibre cream were used. Microfibre cream is fused with low-resin material to reduce the number of carbon layers (number of shaft turns). This is the overall look of the new Kabt rod material.

On the other hand, the TIP (tip section), which provides high sensitivity, and the sharp high-tension belly (body section) are made of ultra-light carbon graphite, which Megabass has been working with successfully for a long time. So the feel is light and strong. In addition, it is sharp. In addition, the micro-cream fibre structure achieves a high degree of traceability. The potential of this shape memory metal hybrid shaft, which incorporates numerous cutting-edge technologies from Megabass, is immeasurable. It's time for everyone to enjoy the fishing performance of a shaft so strong you wouldn't guess it from the outside. The name is Orochi XXX (Kaisa). Only you can unleash the power of the unknown.
